

Predator Research

For the few days I spend back at Mashatu, I was hoping to find 2 of my leopard females with newborn cubs, but that was not the case. Hopefully they will give birth soon. I am, however, finding it very difficult to spot the leopards during the day, since they are naturally more skittish during the day, but now with the tall grass and dense vegetation it seems to be almost impossible. During nighttime I still find and see the leopards on a daily basis. They are all healthy and seem to be benefiting from the dense vegetation that makes stalking & hunting easier.

The big male leopard, Skebengwa, on the prowl.

Predator greetings

Andrei Snyman